Tēnā koutou katoa

Welcome to the 39th issue of ReResolution, our first for 2024. If we have not yet had the pleasure of extending our warm and heartfelt New Year greetings, we would like to seize this opportunity to wish you a prosperous and Happy New Year.

As we here in New Zealand bid a fond farewell to the blissful summer holidays, it's time to set our sights forward and eagerly anticipate the year that awaits us. We are excited to carry on our mission of delivering you the most current, pertinent, and high-quality content in the specialised field of private dispute resolution. We have a wealth of enlightening articles, stimulating discussions, and comprehensive analyses from industry experts, all of which we are excited to unveil and share with you. Here's to a year brimming with opportunities for learning, personal growth, and triumph in navigating the complex world of commercial disputes.

Onto this issue of ReResolution in which we continue covering key legal developments in dispute resolution across the globe. In our feature article, Sam Dorne goes through the English Court of Appeal's praise of the ADR process and how that may influence litigation going forward. Elsewhere in the issue, Maria Cole looks at the role of a judge in court proceedings and Alex Lyall details the recent successes and failures of a Singapore cryptocurrency platform's arbitration strategy.

I sincerely hope you find this issue not only interesting, but also rich in valuable insights that you can apply in your work or studies. Please, feel free to distribute copies of ReResolution to your friends and colleagues – they are most welcome to get in touch with us if they wish to receive our publications directly.
