Tēnā koutou katoa

Welcome to the 40th issue of ReSolution! What started as a humble newsletter back in 2011 has flourished into a widely circulated and highly regarded quarterly journal. Over the years, we have evolved, expanded, and endeavoured to provide our readers with insightful, engaging content. As we celebrate this milestone, we want to express our gratitude to our loyal readers and contributors who have been with us on this journey. Here's to the next 40 issues and beyond!

In recent news, we are also excited to announce that the New Zealand International Arbitration Centre (NZIAC) has recently signed a memorandum of understanding with the China International Economic and Trade Arbitration Commission (CIETAC). This signifies a significant strengthening of ties and cooperation between our organisations.

Like the 39 before it, this issue of ReSolution continues our coverage of key legal developments in dispute resolution across the globe. In our feature article, Kate Holland profiles a bizarre case where the English High Court had to deal with a fabricated arbitral award. Elsewhere in the issue, Sam Dorne compares the standards to which judges and arbitrators are held, Maria Cole considers how a court may deal with conflicting dispute resolution clauses, and Alex Lyall looks at the impact a 2021 New Zealand High Court decision had on a recent Malaysian judgment concerning ICSID.

I sincerely hope you find this issue not only interesting, but also rich in valuable insights that you can apply in your work or studies. Please, feel free to distribute copies of ReSolution to your friends and colleagues – they are most welcome to get in touch with us if they wish to receive our publications directly.
