Explanatory note

This note is not part of the regulations, but is intended to indicate their general effect.

These regulations, which come into force on 1 April 2007, make a number of amendments to the Fisheries (Amateur Fishing) Regulations 1986.

The effect of the amendments is as follows:

- it is made clear that any finfish of lawful size that is likely to survive and is immediately returned to the waters from which it was taken is not to be included in the fisher’s maximum daily limit:
  - any undersize fish, shellfish, or aquatic life that is immediately returned to the waters from which it was taken is not to be included in the fisher’s maximum daily limit:
  - a diver who takes less than 3 times his or her individual entitlement under regulation 19A is not to be considered to have committed a serious non-commercial offence under regulation 29:
  - national amateur fishing minimum legal sizes are introduced for red gurnard (25 cm) and trumpeter (35 cm):
  - it is unlawful to possess a live catfish and any catfish taken alive must be killed immediately.

Issued under the authority of the Acts and Regulations Publication Act 1989.

Date of notification in Gazette: 1 March 2007.

These regulations are administered by the Ministry of Fisheries.
