Explanatory note

This note is not part of the regulations, but is intended to indicate their general effect.

These regulations revoke and replace the Medicines (Related Products (Exempted Foods)) Regulations 2002, which were due to expire with the close of 13 February 2004.

The regulations permit, until the close of 13 August 2007, the making of certain health claims in respect of certain foods. The foods include a range of vegetables, breads, breakfast cereals, and orange juices. The claims are about the health benefits of increased maternal consumption of folate. The claims would otherwise be contrary to provisions in the Medicines Act 1981 that restrict, or prohibit without the consent of the Minister of Health, the sale, distribution, or advertisement of foods in respect of which claims of a therapeutic purpose are made.

Apart from extending the expiry date of the permission to make folate claims, the regulations update references to the applicable food standards provisions.

The regulations come into force on 15 January 2004.
